Excerpt from Aphorisms, Definitions, Reflections, and Paradoxes: Medical, Surgical and Dietetic

I Dedicate these thoughts, resulting in an attempt to simplify the Theory and Art of Medicine, to my colleagues of the Medical Profession, a profession which, as a body, has always in its long and honourable history preferred the public benefit to its own immediate gain, and which has, as a body, considered the public benefit to be its own gain. And in particular I dedicate them to the Medical Faculty of the ancient University of Edinburgh, where happily, in my student days, philosophy yet survived, and where there is reason to believe it still lives and will continue to do so; where also I was taught, if not to think, at least to make what effort was possible, towards the application of the reasoning faculty to the facts and phenomena revealed by science.
