This is a first edition, really more of a draft with only the first 250 pages edited for consistency. It is less for general distribution, that will be the second edition, as a way of putting the new physics of NLC into the public hands. It is loosely based on Hologram theory from where it had its roots, but quickly departs from any dimension based theory. It departs entirely from time. It describes the universe as it is, not as we perceive it. The first step departing from Hologram theory to NLC was recognizing that (1) everything happens at once in the absence of time. This led to the concept that (2) time had both linear and non-linear attributes. What we call time was linear time and ignored non-linear time as a predecessor or generator of linearity. The next step in the progression was (3) the determination that time had different "phases". Several analogies were then formed to describe the features of these time phases, numbering them (clock time 1(CT1), clock time 2(CT2), etc); looking at them as orbits or states; developing the inter-relational aspects (conservation of time, dimensional change-speed, expression as dimensional or force elements, and exponential compression) and the process of beginning to explain these relationships and how they were derived from a static environment. (4) Next was the recognition that compression occurred according to algorithms based on position and not time and the ratios were exponentials of 2 which led to the idea that space-time reflected information theory. (5) This led to the idea that all moments in time were fixed permanently, most likely in a shrinking spiral, the movement inward reflected by the compression of coordinates. (5) Common existence of points indicated that quantum moments of time continue to exist and our perceived ability to change the universe only exists by way of "slowing" down one way change in all coordinates and hence time is illusory, only location along the spiral of existence defines location in space-time, (6) One way change meant not just a "one way" clock time, but also "one way" dimensions so that there is no difference between the dimensions of time and space; no true space time, just coordinates in different states coexisting with our own. The "manipulation" of dimension was nothing more than slowing down one set of coordinate change relative to another, just another manifestation of the rules of physics, and (7) there was no randomness, god truly doesn't play dice with the universe, not even with our seemingly independent actions. (8) The changes in the nature of the primary spiral reflected features that could be represented in terms of origin and change by linear, intersecting mirror image spirals which are fixed algorithms meaning that we live our lives a quantum moment along two intersecting spirals in amber.
